ASPHN promotes the value of our profession.

Public health nutritionists possess diverse skills and expertise ranging from nutrition science...to food systems...to finance and grant management...

We champion the profession of public health nutrition and continually work to promote the value of public health nutritionists. From our collaborative work with other organizations...to our advocacy...to our recently published brief on The Role of Public Health Nutrition in Obesity Prevention, we are here to advance public health nutritionists.

ASPHN's Vision

The Association of State Public Health Nutritionists seeks to create new environmental norms where healthy eating and active living are the easy and natural choices for all Americans.
Developing tomorrow’s leaders...today.

ASPHN’s online and in-person leadership development resources and training programs give our members the tools and skills they need to be at the forefront of results-oriented, healthful outcomes across the nation.

What’s more, we’ve recently launched the Emerging Leaders Project for members who are new to ASPHN or who are newly involved in the organization.

Recognizing excellence in our field.

Each June at our Annual Meeting, the ASPHN Awards program recognizes excellence in public health leadership across five categories.

We also profile members who are leading the way in maternal and child health through the publication of the MCH Nutrition Success Stories. Be sure to take a look and see what makes our members extraordinary.

“I love the leadership training that is available to us. It allows us a chance to learn more about up-and-coming issues and trends in our field.”
ASPHN... helping members achieve health equity in their communities and states

There's strength in numbers.

ASPHN’s 300-plus members support policies, funding, strategies and programs that promote nutrition and physical activity and prevent disease.

From advancing the consumption of fruits and vegetables, to promoting breastfeeding and maternal and child health and nutrition, to stemming the tide on the obesity epidemic, ASPHN’s members share a common drive and passion for public health.

ASPHN’s councils address key areas of nutrition.

Our National Council of Fruit & Vegetable Nutrition Coordinators is comprised of members who are state Fruit & Vegetable Nutrition Coordinators. Council members serve in ASPHN leadership positions, help shape legislation and receive continuing education and professional development. Most importantly, they are making a difference in the public’s access, purchase and consumption of fruits and vegetables.

The Maternal & Child Health (MCH) Nutrition Council works on a range of policy, programs and services including the promotion of nutritional well-being across the lifespan of women, infants, children, youth and families. Participation on the Council helps members develop their leadership skills, engage in advocacy and public policy development and share ideas with peers. Any ASPHN member can join the MCH Council.

Our new Obesity Prevention Nutrition Council’s purpose is to strengthen policy, environmental change, programs and services to decrease obesity across the nation. Any ASPHN member can join the Obesity Prevention Nutrition Council.

“ASPHN has become the ‘go to’ voice of public health nutrition because it recognizes and corrals all of our individual strengths into a common resource.”

The information you want.
ASPHN keeps its members up-to-date on emerging issues, policies, opportunities, strategies, grants, research and other pertinent data.

Content is continually added to our searchable website and we publish and distribute a monthly e-newsletter to our members highlighting new association resources and programs. Our Council of Fruit & Vegetable Coordinators also issues a monthly e-newsletter called “News to Use.”

The resources you need.
ASPHN produces several key publications each year on topics which are vital to our membership. These publications are available for download on our website.

Timely information and resources from related organizations are posted on our home page in a feature called “What’s New in Public Health Nutrition.” Additionally, we list webinars and conferences from other organizations that you might want to know about.

“I have been an ASPHN member for less than a year, but I am already benefitting professionally!”

Facilitating beneficial peer support that encourages the sharing of innovative ideas.

Perhaps one of the most vital aspects of membership in ASPHN is the ability to interact and learn from your peers. Active members build relationships with fellow members in other states and are able to learn what they are doing and how their peers’ work can be applied in their own communities. Together our members advance the industry, the association and their own work.

Opportunities to convene and grow.

ASPHN’s annual meeting, committees, councils and workgroups bring members together in meaningful and productive ways. Our committees and councils conference regularly and offer many leadership, mentoring and advocacy opportunities.

We encourage you to learn more and get involved with ASPHN’s Policy, Collaboration, or Membership Communication and Outreach Committee.

“One of the benefits I have received in being an ASPHN member is getting to know other public health nutritionists and learning how they handle challenging situations.”

Connect with Fellow Members

Keeping in touch with other members and finding fellow members in your state is easy through ASPHN’s easily accessible online Members Directory.
Collaborating with other organizations.

ASPHN collaborates with other organizations in order to strengthen successful outcomes in public health.

Our strategic partnerships are ongoing and varied, and include such organizations as Action for Healthy Kids, National Salt Reduction Initiative and the United States Breastfeeding Committee.

A resource for effective collaborations.

Effective Collaborations is a new ASPHN web page designed to help members sharpen their skills in leading and participating in collaborative projects.

The web page includes background information, skill development resources, tools and examples of how other members have successfully carried out effective collaborations.

Serve as an ASPHN Liaison

Through our collaborative efforts, our members have an opportunity to serve as ASPHN liaisons to other organizations.

“The support the organization provides is amazing and demonstrates that you can fulfill all your normal responsibilities and still make a difference at the national level.”
